

Why We Say NICA Is the Biggest Institute

Usually, every economy transits from cash-based to a more liberal, participatory credit system.

Regardless of one's academic, professional/occupational affiliations, everyone looks forward to having access to a system that supports easy set-up of a new business, growth or expansion of an existing business, investment in bigger and further opportunities, or the ability to purchase goods and services which make for more comfortable living through buy now, pay later arrangements across every society.

In a credit economy, both the governments, businesses and individuals have the opportunity to grow, expand and develop the economy faster than in a cash and carry system.

Only in a credit-based economic system will you find people having access to consumer credit, financial credit, trade credit, business credit, sovereign credit and political credit.

“Regardless of one's academic, professional/occupational affiliations, everyone looks forward to having access to a system that supports easy set-up of a new business, growth or expansion of an existing business, investment in bigger and further opportunities, or the ability to purchase goods and services which make for more comfortable living through buy now, pay later arrangements across every society.”

Comparatively, a cash-based system that is heavily reliant on cash-based transactions has done significant damage to both every government as well as the people than can be quantified.

By the nature of a credit economy, every constituent of an economy -individuals, business, and government - comes to meet with the credit management profession to be assessed for credit line whether it be consumer credit, business credit, trade credit, financial credit, sovereign credit or political credit. Thus, credit management is the mother of other professions, as well as the livewire of business and economy. If this is the case, NICA is a friend of everyone, and needs everyone's support.